About us

When an international assignee moves to a new country for a long term assignment, this evidently impacts the educational career of their children. For these families, it's necessary to be well informed about the educational situation in their future destination in order to make the appropriate decisions. It's equally important that they are well informed about the impact on the educational career of the child in the long term, so they are not only prepared when moving abroad, but also when moving back home or transferring to a new international assignment.

The Edufax' consultancy team advises families and their employers about educational mobility including the relevant risks and common consequences. We provide support to put (preventative) measures in place to maintain and/or improve educational achievement during and after expatriation.

We are a global provider incorporated in to the employee benefit sector of the international mobility market. This market is dynamic and we are responsible for advising our corporate clients on relevant trends to ensure that the educational mobility of their (future) employees is well taken care of.

About our future colleague

We are looking for an Educational Mobility Consultant who understands the impact of international mobility on families with school-aged children and that is sensitive to corporate social responsibility in this context.

At Edufax, we require that you always put the best interest of the child first. Next to that, we want you to understand that company policies will impact which educational options are (financially) within a family's reach. Your role involves balancing the needs of all stakeholders to find solutions that satisfy all parties involved.

Are you passionate about education and educational systems worldwide? Are you responsible, responsive, empathetic, and do you thoroughly understand the stress involved when moving with children internationally? Then you might be the new colleague we're looking for!

What does moving abroad mean for a child's educational career? Edufax analyses a child's educational trajectory in the light of their family's international mobility with an Educational Mobility Check or a consultation. Additionally, we can prepare Educational Progress Reports or carry out assessment to determine a child's level.
